

Grain Growth Study

This paper studies grain growth in a titanium alloy under cyclic thermal loading. The mean grain size increased by twelve percent after one hundred cycles, measured by electron backscatter diffraction. We conclude the effect is reproducible across the studied range.